HOW 276 WORKS

One platform, order to collection

FlowScore screens each transaction. FlowPay pays the supplier and resells to the SME on deferred terms.

Problem

- Korean SMEs pay suppliers upfront but collect from large buyers only months later.
- Banks lend on collateral and financial statements, leaving most SMEs without working capital.
- Real transaction data sits scattered across email, ERP and paper, so lenders cannot use it.

Solution

- FlowPoint connects buyers, SMEs and suppliers on one platform, from purchase order to collection.
- FlowPay buys raw materials for the SME and resells on deferred terms: a trade structure, not a loan.
- FlowScore, our AI risk engine, assesses each transaction with trade and global value chain data.

Key Features

- Transaction-level risk assessment built on order, delivery and payment records, not collateral.
- Trade credit insurance from K-SURE, SGI and KODIT covers a large share of purchase value.
- Confirmed receivables become standardized, financeable assets on a 45-day cycle.

Business Model

- Trade margin on every FlowPay purchase-and-resale transaction.
- Insured SME trade receivables originated by 276 and funded with institutional capital partners.

Business Snapshot

- FlowPay volume grew from USD 3.1M (2024) to USD 7.0M (2025), and reached USD 7.2M in H1 2026 alone
- Breakeven reached in H1 2026 on a 45-day asset cycle
- 0.22% realised loss across 1,295 completed transactions since 2023
- USD 3.0M raised through Series A, plus USD 0.4M in non-dilutive government R&D grants
- Founded 2019 in Seoul; establishing 276 HOLDINGS ASIA in Singapore (in progress)
